This spot-on remount of Daniel

MacIvor's 1991 searing satire – structured as a jargon-laced yammering contest between two carbon-copy businessmen – remains hilarious and disturbing. Sean Jacklin and Michael Ruderman nail its difficult rapid-fire unison sections with precision. Originally written as an indictment of Reagan-era business culture, and as an allegory about the Cold War, MacIvor's razor-sharp writing and absurd revelations are tweaked slightly for the smartphone generation but are otherwise faithfully rendered.
